

The Brain Gain

The best way to predict the future is to create it.

Jason Fry graduated from WHS in 1992 and subsequently attended University of Southern Indiana in Evansville, Indiana where he majored and received a degree in Sociology. Jason lived in Evansville during his college years and worked at Whirlpool Corporation. He moved back to Washington in 2002 in order to be closer to his family and friends.

Jason is married to Sarah Allison, also a Washington native and they have three children, Haley thirteen, Grant three, and Gabriella one. The family is very involved in their church, Pleasant Hill United Methodist. Both Jason's and Sarah's families still reside in Washington and they agree this is the perfect place to live and raise their children.

Jason obtained a position in 2002 at Grain Processing Corporation starting as a dryer operator. In the course of this nine year period he advanced to the position of Starch/Maltrin Division Superintendent. He says, "I could not ask for a better plant or group of people to work for, right here in Washington, Indiana."

Jason and Sarah are very happy to be living in Washington. He remembers, "my grandpa told me some people spend 18 years of their life trying to move away from home and then they spend the rest trying to get back."
